Technical Perspectives

Following a higher open by the DJIA during which the “senior indices” intraday high exceeded Wednesday’s intraday high, the DJIA proceeded to fall like a stone. In turn, the DJIA’s intraday low was beneath Wednesday’s intraday low. At the final bell, the DJIA lost almost 31 points. What I have effectively described is known as a negative “outside reversal day.” The S&P 500’s tape action yesterday was slightly more negative as closed beneath Wednesday’s intraday low. The NASDAQ didn’t record such a pattern, closing down 13 points. On the NYSE, volume expanded to 1.17 billion shares. There were 164 net advancing issues, a good reading. New 52-week lows (18) expanded, and this figure should be watched closely going forward.

Yesterday’s tape action essentially locks in short-term selling pressure (resistance) for a number of stock market indices, as defined by the late June high (6/21/10) and the intraday highs from Tuesday (7/27/10) and yesterday (7/29/10). Here are those short-term resistance levels: DJIA = 10585-10594, New York Composite (NYA) = 7081-7092, S&P 600 Small Cap Index (SML) = 360-361, S&P 400 Midcap Index (MID) = 783-785. Here are additional resistance levels: S&P 500 = 1116-1121 and 1131, NASDAQ = 2308 and 2341

I have been hoping for a near-term pause and/or pullback since Tuesday and then expecting a short-term pullback since Wednesday. I continue to expect further short-term downside probing. It’s going to take a good move above the resistance levels highlighted above in order to extend the “July rally.” However, I also want to mention again: “When coupled with a plan to manage risk (identify stop-loss levels ahead of time), good quality pullbacks are for buying.”

Positive (actively managed accounts only): Terremark Worldwide (TMRK/$8.70/Strong Buy; High Risk) – please use a move below $7.55 or beneath $7.39 as a stop-loss point. Additionally, please be apprised that their EPS report is due next week. Consistent with this, some type of hedging technique coupled with the purchase of this stock seems to be a prudent tactic, in my opinion.
